Agriculture was an honorable cailing. Royal, priestly and military classes owned most of he land and live stock. Slaves and hired laborers did the manual work.

In ancient Rome, rural tribes held foremost rank. The people of the cities were discredited as indolent. All ranks and distinction in the State originated in pursuit of agriculture. Cato, the elder, born 234 B. C., in his writings states that a man to be referred to as a good agriculturist or good husbandman received the highest compliment that could be paid him. The same authority declares that careless cultivation of the lands was an offense in Rome that came under cognizance of censors.

Pointed and forked sticks, taken from saplings and larger trees, were the uncouth implements first employed in opening the soil and removing worthless growths.

All this taught barbaric prehistoric man the need for work. It anchored him to a settled home. It led to a desire for a shelter and resulted in building crude huts. Man's civilisation began. Later he sought the companionship of animals. Those he found useful for food or work he undertook to domesticate. Thus did he combine stock-raising with farming. And from that farback, embryonic period, thousands of years agone, to the present time the two callings have been asociated together.

Agriculture and stock-raising have ever been, and are today, the sustaining back-bone of civilization, of all uman industry and progress. Should they cease the food and raw clothing material supply would be gone, and every activity would stop. Scarvation would ensue.

On the older monuments of Egypt re to be found the first historical records of agriculture. They show it was practiced in that ancient country more than 3,000 years before the time of Christ. Even at that distant period, origation and a regular system of tillge were in use.

Babylonia and Palestine also conducted farming in early ancient times. It is said Greece was the first counry to use fertilizer to promote the rowth of crops. Rome in the remote days paid much attention to agriculture. In all these lands stock-raising was pursued in conjunction with farm-

Agriculture was an honorable cailing. Royal, priestly and military classes owned most of he land and live stock. Slaves and hired laborers did the manual work.

In ancient Rome, rural tribes held foremost rank. The people of the cities were discredited as indolent. All ranks and distinction in the State originated in pursuit of agriculture. Cato, the elder, born 234 B. C., in his writings states that a man to be referred to as a good agriculturist or good husbandman received the highest compliment that could be paid him. The same authority declares that careless cultivation of the lands was an offense in Rome that came under cognizance of censors.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS

The pretty country home of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Carroll, one mile north of Matthews, was the scene of one of the most enjoyable events of the season. A real Hallowe'en party given by Mr. and Mrs. Carroll in honor of Mr. Linn Swartz Sunday School class. The invitations sent out were written on small paper pumpkins and fastened together with black cats and each invited guest was requested to come as ghosts.

On approaching the grounds, no lights were visible except those coming from grinning Jack-o-Lanterna and artificial lights shinning on two tall ghosts at the entrance gate, who insisted on shaking hands with each individual with cold, clammy hands that sent chills and thrills down the spinal column. Another ghost stoed on the braod stairway, slapping the faces of the guests with an ley, coll something, unearthly moons and groans seemed to be coming from everywhere. The devil with horns. hoofs and tail was there in a real den that looked very much like "Dantes Inferno". Blue Beard's wife, with her bodiless head, hung up by hir long golden hair, was there, and in the artificial light did look real.

The old witch who looked like the witches in fairy tales was there with her seething caldron sending forth a livid light over her many black cat and telling the fate of the youthful seekers for the future.

The house was artistically decorated with black and yellow crepe paper, witches, black cats, Jack-o-Lanterns and everything pertaining to the season. At length the guests were seated in the reception room on the floor, all lights were extinguished with the exception of one large Jack-o-lantern, when a ghost story was told by each

Refreshments consisting of doughnuts, pumpkin pie, cheese and cocoa was served. After indoor games had been thoroughly indulged in, a big camp fire was built in the park, where all assembled. The telling of ghost stories was again started, when the unearthly yells of a night owl filled the air with horror, making the ghost seem only too real.

The following guests departed at a late hour declaring Mr. and Mrs. Carroll the grandest entertainers to be found anywhere: Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sutton and Henry Harris.
